Active Kudzu Infestation in North County St. Louis (Beyond Housing, 2024)

Why Attend?

Kudzu, often called “the vine that ate the South,” is rising issue in our region. It grows up to one foot per day, overwhelming: Trees and power lines, parks and right of ways, buildings and critical infrastructure

Uncontrolled, kudzu drives up maintenance costs, lowers property values, and puts long-term urban forest health at risk.

Will include presentations from Beyond Housing Forestry and Community Conservation staff and Chuck Caverly with Missouri Native Stewardship Services.

This Workshop Will Help You:

- ✓ Identify kudzu and understand its impact
- ✓ Learn effective control and eradication methods
- ✓ Connect with regional partners and resources
- ✓ Protect your community’s budget, canopy, and future

Who Should Attend?

Municipal leaders, public works staff, parks personnel, and anyone managing green space in the St. Louis Region. Registration is required: <https://forms.office.com/r/mBQM7HsXzy>
